January Reflection

Whew, the time has flown by. When I was starting my project in August of 2021, I did not expect time to pick up more quickly as we are now in 2022. I knew time is running out and I need to sit down and crunch down on some things to get this project done. I had been planning to get my finances for my plan completed since December and it was not done, this was the time to do it.

The month started with the new year and a lot of time off from school so I was able to get done my spreadsheet and complete a lot of market research to make sure my projectiles are perfect for my project. I enjoyed making these spreadsheets. They all work off of input validation and all auto calculate the graphs. It was hard to make all of these charts and calculations but once it was complete it was amazing to look at and watch the charts change as my data did. I am proud of myself for this hard work.

As I was working on finishing up my business plan, my goals did change as I worked on it. In December & November, it was my goal to already get it done and almost finished but the holidays got in the way of this workflow and it was harder for me to get done. For January, I told myself that I was going to sit down and finish it within a couple of days. This was a hard couple of days to learn this stuff then apply it to my business plan but I was able to complete it and it feels very nice to have it done. I am glad I was able to meet my goal (even though it was the same for the past month or two).

Looking forward, now the only thing I have left is to complete the appendix of my business plan. This includes my resume, a processing flowchart, a management hierarchy, an intent to purchase from buyers, advertisement materials/methods, and employee certifications or training. This should not take long to complete and I am on track to completing my project within the next week or two. I am glad that I am making great progress on my business plan.
